

Gentleman,

Scott introduced Topcoat to me at a BMW Club meeting a few months ago. I watched with skepticism as he detailed a car that already looked great. I politely accepted some samples and promptly put them on the shelf in the garage. I collect and restore antique cars and am very particular about the products I use having seen a lot of "snake oil" products in the past. My street cars take a back seat to the restorations and it shows. Red cars do not do well in Florida sun if they are not waxed periodically. Mine was starting to look and feel like chalk. I do not have enough time to properly maintain the finishes of the street cars. I hesitantly tried Topcoat figuring something was better than nothing. Wow. I was very pleasantly surprised at how easy it was to apply and what a stunning difference it made to the car. It was no more time consuming than applying a detail spray and the surface looks and feels freshly waxed. I was so pleased with the result that I immediately did my wife's silver car which is another color that does not do well in the sun. It looked like new. I have found my new favorite product.
